

Why Should Pro-Lifers be Plugged into Social Media?

By Daniel Cohen, GRTL Fall Intern
September 18, 2009

Our generation has often been called the “technology” generation and I think I have to agree with that characterization. However, I think a better title for our generation is the “Social Media” generation.

With Twitter, Facebook, Myspace, Skype, and half a dozen other various outlets for social media, the very way we communicate has changed.

For the most part, we have stopped calling up friends on the phone and started texting them, or, more likely, sending them a wall post or tweet. But something else has happened. Something new has surfaced from our communicative evolution. Via Facebook we can unite for a common cause or debate controversial issues with thousands of people from around the world.

But what does this mean for Pro-lifers? How is this relevant?

All of these new and widely used forms of popular social media have given Pro-lifers the ability to spread the truth about life to millions of people across the earth. Never before have we had such an opportunity to reach out and shape the debate on life and to encourage each other and unite to enact real change.

To Pro-lifers everywhere, I say get involved.

Find Pro-life Twitter accounts, Facebook groups, Myspace pages, and voice your thoughts. Social media is the easiest and most effective way to unite millions of Pro-lifers and see real progress in the Pro-life movement. And it costs very little except time.

So post a Pro-life tweet or send a Pro-life wall post and get the conversation going.

Georgia Right to Life has Twitter, Facebook, and Myspace accounts. We encourage you to visit Twitter.com, Myspace.com, and Facebook.com to get informed and stay plugged in to the latest news.